What is occupational therapy for children?

Occupational therapy assists children’s development in a range of areas, including school, play, coordination, self-care and social skills.

The UQ Occupational Therapy Life Skills Clinic is a specialised occupational therapy practice where our students and qualified clinical educators work with children and their families to help them develop their skills and achieve their goals.

Does your child need assistance with:

- aspects of their learning skills, including writing, concentration, organisation or self-management?
- play and social interaction skills?
- preparing for Prep or Grade One?
- manipulating items such as scissors, small toys or craft materials?
- general coordination and participation in physical activities?
- independence in daily tasks (such as dressing, using cutlery, getting ready for school)?
- coping with sensory input in their everyday environment (sights, sounds, touch or movement)?
- managing anxiety related to relationships at home and school.

The UQ Occupational Therapy Life Skills Clinic offers individual assessments and personalised programs designed to enable your child in everyday tasks.
